Future Services in Leigh Memorial Church

Under current Covid 19 Safety Notifications we are able to hold services in Leigh Memorial Church as well as online. We are calling this 'dual mode'.

You are welcome to come back to church!

Under the 2 square metre rule it is possible to have a maximum capacity, suitably space, for about 180 people.

Under the present constraints we still need to check in with QR codes, hand sanitiser, and wear a mask. Please bring your own if you can - but, if you forget, there will be a supply on hand in the foyer.

Only 5 people at present can sing in the service. They need to be suitably spaced. This will change in the future - but not yet.

We have had to remove the cushions from the pews. They are a soft surface and would require a deeper kind of cleaning than is possible every Sunday. This being the case, bring your own cushion!

We enter the church from the front door, but must exit by another door. There will be a Covid 'marshal' on duty wearing a hi-vis vest to ensure that we observe the proper requirements.

It is not the 'old' normal — but you are welcome to come to church. If you cannot, and your health is vulnerable, you can participate in the service on line.

Each week the schedule for forthcoming services will be posted in the newsletter and placed on the congregational website.

From the Interim Lead Minister

Lent 1B, 2021

Mark 1: 9-15; Matthew 4: 1-11

In the deserts of the heart

Let the healing fountain start W H Auden

1. Lent, discipline and denial or space for self-and-other transformation?

In the movie Chocolat, the people of a small French town of Lansquenet in 1959 celebrate Lent as “a season of rigorous discipline and denial”. In this comedic story, the people attend church regularly, behave as they believe they should, and respect the local authorities, such as the tyrannical village mayor. Yet, the most religious of the townsfolk, led by the mayor are “repressive, austere and distrustful of strangers”. On Ash Wednesday an unwed mother, Vianne (Juliette Binoche – not to mention Johnny Depp) and her daughter come to town. Instead of going to church, Vianne opens up a chocolate shop to which, unlike the church, everyone is welcome and respected. She stands up to the mayor. She cares for a victim of spousal abuse, seek to reconcile family differences.

So of what benefit is Lent as a season of rigorous discipline and denial? Dan Clendenin expresses it this way:

Beyond the popular caricatures of a whimsical film [like Chocolat] there are more sinister realities. Miroslav Volf explores these matters in his book Exclusion and Embrace. Far more than we would ever like to admit, Christians have legitimated various hatreds; instead of being a conscience of our culture we have sometimes been “but a sophisticated echo of its base prejudices.” Our Christian heritage bears its share of complicity in the evils of Jewish genocide, American slavery, the conquests of Native Americans, and missiological imperialisms exported around the world.

Yet, the church – each institution really – has at times not only expressed prejudice as well as disempowering and oppressing others, but, as the movie shows, it shapes and coerces its own. The young priest of the town in the movie Chocolat allows himself to be controlled and manipulated by the mayor, who edits and influences his sermons, that of course to ensure no new influences. We learn though, of the mayor’s burdensome, lonely and angry existence without his wife, who has mysteriously left him. Repressing his loss and pain, he austere projects it outward by using his social power to maintain his control of at least part of his life.

This is not the kind of Lent we are considering today.

Nor is the wilderness experience of Jesus and the temptations, in Mark 1: 9-15 and Matthew 4: 1-11, set within this paradigm of rigorous self-discipline and denial.

In fact, such a stoic approach perpetuates repression and exclusion because it does not address or facilitate a relationship with personal and structural defence mechanisms and repressions as well as the structural roots of exclusion, in our own lives, institutions and society. A new awareness of inner and social repressions may free individuals and citizens to live a life of abundance!

2. Lent is a creative time for self-examination of inner and outer life

In our readings in Mark 1: 9-15, and the longer version in Matthew 4: 1-11, Jesus makes his way into the wilderness to experience his own form of self-examination of his inner and outer life.

As the Uniting Church theologian, William Loader writes:

Wilderness was the wild place, the waiting place, the place of preparation. It also connected then, as it does now, to very basic spirituality: a place to grapple with God [or whatever our ultimate concern is], a place to learn dependence on nature and its provisions, a place of extremes or contrasts, of wild beasts and desert. It is the Lenten space par excellence.

Yet, a Lenten spirituality of discernment is much more complex than Loader suggests. Jesus needed to keep on discovering the truth about himself, as each human being does, not just grappling with who God was for him! He needed to spend time to discern what his unconscious desires were, what familial, religious and cultural meanings systems shaped his identity, how he related to power and politics.

And what was the Word of God that Jesus said we should live by? The words from Deuteronomy, to love God and neighbour? Not most recently, for Jesus! They were the words from God in his baptism: that he and as each human being with him, was valued, loved, and affirmed!

Added to this, in the next chapter of Matthew, Jesus presents us with the radical Word of God, of life in the Sermon on the Mount: that we are all valued, especially the poor! That we are to live honest, integrated, empowered, and equal lives.

God's guidance for public life was not just the law not to kill, but equally to be aware of and honest about the anger which can grow in us: to grow in emotional intelligence, to own our competitiveness and aggression, which is at the heart of conflict and exclusion of the other who is different. That we should love our enemy! That we offer those who seek to gain power over us, the gift of the second mile: if a Roman soldier asked a Judean to carry his equipment for a mile, as decreed by Roman Law, Jesus taught, you offer to carry it a second mile, thus seeking equal power to create the agenda, and engaging the enemy in a surprising reversal of systemic injustice.

The wilderness experience of Jesus enabled him to generate this radical, creative, compassionate and justice-equality oriented teaching.

3. Our Lenten invitation to be self-correcting and self-generating

In conclusion, I want to suggest that Lent is a space in which we are self-and-institution self-correcting and self-generating! Regular wilderness journeys of self-examination enable us and our institutions to explore what our temptations are, to uncover our exclusionary practices and anxiety about the strange/stranger, so as to generate new, empowered identities!

The people in the town in the movie Chocolat could have taken Lent as a time of self-examination and self-and-society re-generation! To explore in holistic spiritual direction:

- The people: what were their unconscious desires that influenced them to give away their power to the aristocratic society, like the mayor; what power did they gain from creating an identity from this master-slave relationship? What did they gain from this collusion? What were their own values? What new capacities did they need to develop to deal with the conflict needed to change, and enter real, robust respectful dialogue.

- The priest: what were his unconscious desires that influenced him to collude with the mayor; what kind of dependent self had he constructed and what did he gain from giving away his freedom, to have no trust in himself.
 - The mayor: how would he engage with his need to control, engage with his repression, to see the loneliness and sadness that lay hidden within him because his wife left him; what was he getting out of overpowering other people?
- Lent invites each of us, as selves and institutions, to enter the journey of self-correction and self-generation!

Every year in England the national church puts out a Lenten study. This year Sam Wells, the Dean of St. Martins-in-the Fields in the centre of London, has published The Cross at the Heart of God. That title is no surprise. The lectionary gospel for the year is the gospel of Mark. It turns upon a 'journey to the cross': along the way the disciples learn more about who this Jesus is and how he differs from their expectations.

This Lenten season we are able to reflect upon this journey in the light of the continuing presence and legacy of Covid 19. Throughout the past year we have been told what we can do and what we can't do. It has been a time of necessary compliance. The church has often had to respond to pandemics in the past. It has always sought to understand how the life of faith, the gospel, fits into this kind of situation. In our time the Pope and Rowan Williams, former Archbishop of Canterbury, have provided much helpful food for thought.

This study will combine the themes of Mark with how members of the church responded to their Covid 19 equivalent.

If you have not yet met Rev. Vladimir or Pastor Sarah, please take the time to do so today.

Thank you to all who have worked to make this service possible, and also to all who make the zoom services possible. You are all appreciated. One does not realise how much effort goes in to creating the links, and the many aspects to bring it together.

News from Jean Mitchell at Uniting Aged Care (Mayflower). Trish Rooney has now started at Uniting as Chaplain, and Thursday last week led a worship service, and it was enjoyed by all who attended.
Jean has begun a little gardening experiment, planting and watering some plants that were brought to her. She will tend them lovingly, and hoping for the best. With Jean's green thumbs I am sure there will soon be some results.

Lent 2021: To Live Anew

Free Materials for Personal Reflection during Lent

“Lent is a summons to live anew,” writes Joan Chittister. But how do you do that?

In six brief but powerful reflections on one of the Sunday readings, Sister Joan offers insight into how “living anew” might look in these extraordinary times of pandemic and political upheaval.

She also introduces six companions—one for each week of Lent—to walk with you during these 40 days of spiritual renewal.

Each “companion” embodies a special quality for spiritual growth:

Thomas Merton brings the gift of contemplation;

Teresa of Avila, the gift of prayer;

Rachel Carson, the gift of awe of creation;

Oscar Romero, the gift of prophecy;

Sojourner Truth, the gift of joy;

Mother Jones, the gift of speaking your truth.

Discussion questions are provided for each week, along with colourful artwork making this 8-page publication ideal for personal reflection.

Included with the materials is a personal journal to record your thoughts, feelings and reflections each week.

If you would like to use these materials to support your Lenten journey this year, nine copies are available for pick up from reception at 175 in Westmead.

Synod Climate Action
Conference - Future Directions

When:

Saturday March 20,
9.00am – 5.00pm

Where:

Centre for Ministry and on-line via Zoom

In 2019 the Synod meeting initiated the Synod Climate Action Strategy.

The strategy grew from our church's long standing commitment to care for creation.

As a church we resolved to:

- Advocate to all levels of government for reduced greenhouse gas emissions
 - Stand with young people in their concerns about climate change
- Work to reduce our emissions in all parts of the church

Since then five task groups have been working to bring the strategy to life in tangible ways.

In the wider world much is happening to re-focus attention on the need for decisive action on climate change: a change of government in the US; our major trading partners recently committing to net zero emissions by 2050; the next UN Climate Conference in Glasgow this November.

With the Synod meetings approaching it is timely to consider what our priorities should be in the next phase of the Climate Strategy. What actions will make a difference?

What can we as a church distinctively contribute to this movement for a safer climate future and flourishing world for all?

What can you do?

If those questions stir you in some way, if you want to be part of answering them in thinking and action, then we would love to have you at the conference. There will be a range of speakers and workshops stimulating our reflection on issues like:

- Climate leadership and what types of action can achieve positive change
- Understanding what other climate actors are doing and where we connect
- Faith, politics and living and voting our values
- First Nation's perspectives on care for creation

What it will take to have an impact for our Pacific Island neighbours

Due to the changing nature of COVID restrictions physical places may be limited. We hope that many Uniting Church people, especially in regional and rural areas, will be able to participate via Zoom. Either way, please register early by going to:

<https://www.eventbrite.com.au/.../climate-action...>

We hope to see you there.
